

Jin Soon Natural Hand and Foot Spa

Time-Tested Treatments

Jin Soon Choi, owner of Jin Soon Natural Hand and Foot Spas in New York City

As one of the most sought-after manicurists for mainstream fashion editorial photo shoots and advertising campaigns, Choi counts beauty editors, fashion stylists and hand models—a highly discerning group—among her most loyal customers. These trendsetters trust their pedis to Choi because of her tried-and-true pedicure treatments, two of which stand out: The Spirit of the Beehive, a popular, paraffin-packed winter treat, and The Magic Clay Slipper, a tingling, refreshing service most requested during the summer months. While some salons introduce seasonal services or promotions, Choi sticks to her time-tested treatments year-round. “My services are really relevant to all seasons, so I don’t find the need to introduce new treatments that often. Instead, I constantly research new products and introduce the best ones to my clients.”

Color Code: Choi’s Manhattanite beauty insiders lust after orange and orange-red shades for their immaculately kept toenails.

Youth Elixirs

Debbie Leavitt, manicurist at Rescue Hand & Foot Spa in Los Angeles

In Hollywood, looking young is an obsession, so it stands to reason that every part of the body—including feet—must exude the dewy skin of youth. Leavitt assures high-power movie execs that their feet will be plump and wrinkle-free with the Micro-Infusion Pedicure, a service that incorporates the age-defying dynamos microdermabrasion and glycolic acid. Says Leavitt, “The pleasure of soft, smooth feet is something most people like to have. Offering spa-level treatments allows the client to feel satisfied knowing her feet have been taken care of properly and safely.”

Color Code: Hollywood types love corals and brighter reds, with Zoya’s cherry red Diana and orange-red Haley topping the color charts.

Milk + Honey Spa

Climate Control

Alissa Bayer, owner of milk + honey spa in Austin, Texas

You can’t take the sticky heat out of Texas, and most beauty-conscious residents have come to terms with the stifling humidity. To beat the heat, they visit Bayer, who serves up the Peppermint Pedi. Clients soak their wilted feet in water infused with peppermint essential oils, followed by lotions and a mask blended with stimulating peppermint as well. “This is a great treatment in Austin when it’s hot, hot, hot outside,” says Bayer. “Tootsies feel fresh and tingly.”

Ped Trend: “Natural products are big—those icky chemicals don’t belong in a spa or on your body!”

Color Code: Texas honeys shimmy this summer in warm tan and browned-pink polish hues.
